

MANDATORY MINIMUM SENTENCES

Letters: Mandatory minimums fail to treat prescription drug addicts

Since the 1980s, the war on drugs resulted in stiff minimum mandatory sentences for drug traffickers caught with boatloads of drugs imported from foreign countries. Somehow, the minimum mandatory drug-trafficking sentences were amended to include as little as seven prescription pain pills. Somehow, someone addicted to pain medication after an injury was included in this web meant for big-time drug traffickers. This has to stop. We cannot economically handle the drain on our society to prosecute and warehouse these individuals who simply need some drug treatment. These people – our sons, daughters, brothers and sisters who suffer pain prescription drug medication addictions – can more economically be counseled and treated as opposed to being warehoused in our prisons and labeled convicted felons.

State Rep. Katie Edwards, D-Plantation, and Rep. Dave Hood, R-Daytona Beach, and Sen. Rob Bradley, R-Orange Park, have introduced legislation that raises the quantity of oxycodone and hydrocodone levels of various minimum mandatory prison sentences. Rep. Matt Gaetz, R-Shalimar, the chairman of the Criminal Justice Committee, has agreed to support this legislation, with conditions. These legislators should be applauded for this display of courage and leadership.
